Impersonating an office is a major hassle so I really don't need that kind of thing happening. Yes, small office and this laptop is attached to it which means it has to be somewhere central to the table desk and have enough table space on the side and for the office itself to be large. I use 80% of the time 60% of the time for business users and 20% for myself. I like dual screens and no really I don't need an expert plan manager. Also thinking of having the desktop virtualised and being able to use it in the cloud but don't want to have to pay for licences for that as well. A: A 1-sentence answer: You need expert. Anything else is just going to introduce chaff and confusion. You also need to be careful of passing off requirements as requirements. There are expert plans out there which actually use Microsoft Excel (or similar). See also: What does it mean when I am tagged as an "expert" on multiple sites? Is "Expert" useful when rating/tagging question for Stack Exchange? Over the past six years, Aurangabad-based The Kundan Group has built a 15.5-acre industrial complex along the river Ghaggar. With 17 units that together house several multinational companies (from technology to food to pharmaceuticals), the company has expanded its footprint in the vicinity of Aurangabad and Nanded. Armed with data from the government of Maharashtra and Aurangabad municipal commissioner's website, we decided to delve into which property actually brings in the most revenue to the state. Data for more than 400 cities and towns, including all the 65 cities in Maharashtra's 10 districts, was sourced for this analysis. Revenue data for Aurangabad was used to filter the data so that it reflected only the income generated directly by properties in the municipal corporation's territory. Data for income in 2016-17 was sourced from official sources — local corporators' accounts and municipal council books — which means there are no errors, and that the incomes are genuine. The findings With an average ground rent of Rs. 2.15 lakh per unit per annum, Nanded tops the chart, followed by Aurangabad (Rs. 1.5 lakh) and Osmanabad (Rs. 1.4 lakh). Then we take a look at
